Soleimani is Dead

Tony Odarg January 11, 2020

The amount of reactions to and news articles about the historic assassination of General Qasem Soleimani abound in infinite number. One of the common threads of many of them is that Trump is surprising pundits and people on the ground alike by engaging in a foreign policy not very different from one that Jeb! could have conjured up. That in itself should make anyone shake in their jackboots, given that the legacy of the Bush war crimes were some of the sweetest sound bites from the 2016 campaign. Remembering with fondness the moment when Trump took aim at the CIA, George “they knew there were none” Bush and garnered applause seems like a trope from an era far far away. So far away in fact, not even a drone strike could hit it.

I will attempt to quote and separate the various reactions to this historic event, and perhaps offer my own perspective intermixed therein.

Soleimani was as an Iranian Major General in the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps (IRGC) and, from 1998 until his death in 2020, commander of its Quds Force, a division primarily responsible for extraterritorial military and clandestine operations. Which means that he did military operations outside the boundaries of Iran.

As a “radically mainstream” political dissident myself, I am quite interested in dissident thought on this topic. For example, Russia Insider published a piece in which they list various Leftists and Zionists, and surprisingly some anarchists no one’s heard of, which are now sounding quite a bit like Sean Hannity:

> Spencer Sunshine, a self-proclaimed anarchist and prominent voice in the American “antifa” scene who has been accused of Zionist entryism in the past, took to twitter to reiterate Sean Hannity’s script on the killing: that the Iranians brought it upon themselves by “antagonizing” America and “meddling” in Iraq. It speaks to the state of the modern coopted left that somebody like Sunshine can express the Israeli government’s line and still survive the scrutiny of his peers. Sunshine is very suspicious of anti-war sentiment due to the fact that Jews like Sheldon Adelson and Jared Kushner are responsible for our over-the-top Iran policy. He has spent much of his career fighting what he calls “left-wing anti-Semitism” (principled anti-Zionism).
> Source
> Archive

That’s one example. And we should expect stupidity from Zionist weirdos and Ben Shapiro fans (assuming he was any). But when it’s full blown conspiracy nuts like Alex Jones or incels like Nick Fuentes, who supported Trump and are now shilling for war….or just plain making shite up, you have to wonder.

> Alex Jones of InfoWars has released a new conspiracy theory claiming that the Jews who control Donald Trump’s government had to set off a chain-reaction that will lead to a regional conflagration in order to prevent World War III. According to Jones, the Obama administration is responsible for tensions with Iran by engaging with diplomacy with the country instead of attacking it. His audience isn’t buying it. Over half of the reactions on his Bitchute video on the topic are negative.

But Nick Fuentes, you can do better than that, right?

> Nick Fuentes of the Youtube show “America First” has also come under fire for recent statements on Telegram. While he prefaces his statements by saying he technically opposes a full war with Iran, he followed this by cheerleading threats by Zionists in Washington to bomb ancient Persian cultural sites, calls Iran a “degenerate Muslim shithole,” celebrates “America bullying ppl and throwing around missiles”, and comes to the defense of the “American-led” globalist military order, which Trump himself repeatedly criticized throughout his life and, as Tucker Carlson has said, won the presidency in large part by running against it.

Speaking of which, this Zoomer once Cruz-supporting boy scout went on Telegram and called the audience critical of Trump-Iran war, you guessed it: GAY!

Nicholas J. Fuentes

Just lol at babies whining about international law and war crimes and the "cultural sites." How fucking gay do you have to be, do you work for the UN?

2K 8:57 PM

B-b-but not the cultural sites! Stfu bitch, we make the rules, we're America 2.1K 8:57 PM

International law is what we say it is and the rest of the world will have to live with it

1.8K 8:57 PM

I'm against the current situation which has America fighting wars for Israel and KSA in the Middle East that don't benefit our people, but I'm not by any stretch "anti war" on principle

1.6K 9:00 PM

For me it's always a question of the national interest: is this good for our country? Does this advance our interests? All these concerns about sovereignty and inernat'l law and so on are tertiary at best

1.6K 9:03 PM

And btw fuck Iran defenders. I oppose war with Iran but let's not forget that this is a degenerate muslim shithole controlled by a regime that hates us. Maybe their hate is not irrational but that's beside the point. If you defend iran youre retarded 1.5K 9:07 PM

Just because Israel has manipulated the situation doesn't mean that Iran doesn't oppose us. I'm so sick of the iran apology—ppl posting the map with all the US bases around it. Bro good, we should dominate the world. They would do the same if they could 1.4K 9:09 PM

"B-but iran is just defending themselves!" Maybe so, and that's legitimate for them to pursue their national interest. But America is the boss and iran must submit 1.3K 9:10 PM

A lot of these cringe ppl got disproven with the current DPRK negotiations. Trump extended the olive branch and successfully "reset" the denuclearization process and surprise surprise the Norks still won't cooperate 1.1K 9:13 PM

Because all these other countries that constitute the counter-American axis (China, Iran, Russia, DPRK, Venezuela, etc) are totally pragmatic and self interested. A lot of isolationists and non interventionists eat up this internationalist propaganda about how these are poor underdogs being bullied by America. There's some truth in this but it's important to consider that what is motivating their opposition to America is the same will-to-power that motivates our "imperialism" 965 9:18 PM

And somehow, even Charlie Kirk has come out for, well see for yourself (from the same Russia Insider article above):

> The mealy-mouthed Charlie Kirk of TPUSA, a libertarian-Zionist think-tank Trump has recently adopted to engage in outreach for his 2020 campaign, tepidly approved of Washington's hit on Soleimani, but has also come out in support of full military withdrawal from Iraq.

This has been deep thoughts with Nosferatu.

According to a poll taken by Foriegn Policy found that:

> 70% of Americans believe heightened tensions with Iran are entirely the fault of the Trump administration. Even after Trump and Mike Pompeo accused Iran of attacking the oil fields of “ally” Saudi Arabia on September 14th, 75% of Americans responded that a war with Iran was completely unwarranted.

Continuing on, please read this Security Alert from the U.S. Embassy in Iraq:

> Due to heightened tensions in Iraq and the region, the U.S. Embassy urges American citizens to heed the January 2020 Travel Advisory and depart Iraq immediately.

Regardless of the terrible things Trump, I mean Soleimani, has done it does bear repeating that he was indispensable in fighting ISIS. From NBC (archive) in 2015:

> Since being put in control of the Revolutionary Guard’s elite Quds Force in 2000, the general’s track record has reportedly included supporting Hezbollah and Syrian President Bashar Assad, and according to the Pentagon, supplying IEDs that have killed American troops in Iraq. The United Nations has imposed an asset freeze and travel ban on him, which he has flouted.
> “His organization is drenched in American blood,” Jim Phillips said….Middle East analyst for conservative think tank the Heritage Foundation….. “It’s infused with an anti-American philosophy and a cooperation with him or his followers would not be on a sustainable basis. The U.S. would regret it.”

So another conservative, namely Jim Philips wants more war? Imagine my shock!

Widely criticized by many people on the right especially, was the Time’s Magazine, publishing a how-to guide for parents who want to talk with their kids about drone strikes: call it “drone education”:

> Why did the U.S. take action against Soleimani?
> How has Iran responded following Soleimani's death?
> What will the U.S. do if Iran retaliates?
> Why don't the U.S. and Iran get along?

Answers are provided in typical fashion. However, breaking from the usual mantra by Fox News views that liberals be snowflakes, I found this piece to be one of the best, down to earth, for people not familiar with the situation or the history, and trying to understand what the heck is going on! In short, exit the naysayers.

According to the New York Times, the whole idea that we are leaving Iraq was all just a big huge mistake:

> An official letter from the Defense Department informing Iraq that the United States was "repositioning forces" for "movement out of Iraq" produced headlines around the world that an American withdrawal had begun.
> But the letter, drafted by the United States military command in Baghdad, was sent out by mistake. The furor it caused prompted Defense Secretary Mark T. Esper and the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Mark A. Milley, to call an urgent news conference to deny the reports.
> "It was an honest mistake," General Milley told reporters at the Pentagon. "That letter is a draft, it was a mistake, it was unsigned, it should not have been released."
> Archive

It was also reported (archive) that Iran had fire missiles at Iraqi bases where U.S. soldier were stationed. Somehow no one thought that if we weren't in Iraq, those Iraqis might still be alive. ~~God~~ Allah forbid that rag head desert people defend themselves and be ever so slightly irritated that Westerners are meddling in their camels:

> - At least 12 missiles strike bases in Iraq housing U.S. troops
> - No casualties reported among U.S. troops
> - Pentagon confirms missiles launched from Iran
> - President Trump briefed, to make statement Wednesday morning
> - Oil prices surged following reports of the attack

Apparently Soleimani was a meme master, and enjoyed antagonizing Trump back with Game of Thrones movie posters. Also, courtesy of Gerard Butler singehandedly fending off the Koreans.

Remember this gem

https://twitter.com/realDonaldTrump/status/1058388700617498625

Well Soleimani, you can better, can’t you?

The Washington Post reported on the back-and-forth they both had, unfortunately, the Syrian President’s account was suspended, so he’ couldn’t get in on the fun:

> The Trump administration was engaged that year in a pressure campaign against Iran, whose president Hassan Rouhani warned in July that “America should know that peace with Iran is the mother of all peace, and war with Iran is the mother of all wars.” This was relatively mild for a theocratic regime whose founding Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini dubbed the United States “The Great Satan,” but Trump took particular offense.
> A few days later, Soleimani stepped in to defend Rouhani. “It is not in our president’s dignity to respond to you,” he told Trump via Iran’s Tasnim news agency. “If you begin the war, we will end the war. You know that this war will destroy all that you possess.”

In any event, that’s the least of our worries. The next best bit of propaganda is Mike Pence somehow attempting to connect Soleimani and Iran to the September 11th attacks on the World Trade Centers! Yes, even 9/11 was an inside job, and inside job to the Iranians, the latest boogieman in the American empire.

So what is this all about, well apparently there is some truth to it:

> Katie Waldman, a spokeswoman for Mr. Pence, said that Mr. Pence’s statement was based on a finding by the U.S. Treasury Department in 2016 that Iran permitted “several of the 9/11 hijackers” to transit through the country. The finding did not directly link the hijackers to any forces overseen by General Suleimani, or specify how many may have been granted passage. Source

Even the 9/11 Commission Report found:

> We have found no evidence that Iran or Hezbollah was aware of the planning for what later became the 9/11 attack. At the time of their travel through Iran, the Al Qaeda operatives themselves were probably not aware of the specific details of their future operation.

I could not say it better than:

> Why General Suleimani, the leader of a hard-line Shiite Muslim military apparatus, would have come to the aid of members of Al Qaeda, a Sunni extremist group with strong ties to Saudi Arabia, is also unclear. General Suleimani spent much of his career undermining Saudi Arabia, and once even plotted to have the Saudi ambassador to the United States assassinated. At various points, he was also said to have helped facilitate the capture of Qaeda militants on behalf of the United States.

So basically, lying to us about implausible scenarios is the game of the military industrial complex, which we will get to later. And some people have asked if Trump is doing all of this to distract from his failure to fulfill his promises on domestic issues. Well, as they say, there's a tweet for everything (archive):

> Don't let Obama play the Iran card in order to start a war in order to get elected–be careful Republicans! – Trump 2012

https://twitter.com/realDonaldTrump/status/260421157201784832

The old game of deflection conservatives accuse the left of engaging in is exactly what is going on here. Make on mistake about it, this is why Trump is doing this.

A great article from alt-right, takes on the dissidents on twitter and elsewhere who are placing Iranian flags in their profiles, by pointing out that the Ayatollah is very anti-white. He supported Black Lives Matter, the Ferguson riots and prosecuting dissidents who were attacked by leftist thugs in Charlottesville. The hostage takers in '79 even released women and blacks on the basis of muh oppression.

> Vice News, 2014:
> The global hashtag #BlackLivesMatter — which sprouted in the wake of police killings of black men across the US this summer — has now reached as far as Iran, where the country's Supreme Leader has reportedly adopted the phrase in a series of tweets ripping into the US over its current race and policing dilemma.
> A tweet posted on Sunday to an English language Twitter account linked to Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, Iran's top spiritual cleric, starkly compared Jesus standing up for the oppressed to the police oppression of black and minority communities in the US.
> The comments follow similar tweets made in the lead-up to Christmas, including one showing a picture of Jesus surrounded by a group of children that drew parallels between racial oppression in the US and the plight of Palestinians in Gaza.

Yahoo News, 2017:

Iran's supreme leader Ayatollah Ali Khamenei joined the international criticism of race-related violence in the United States on Wednesday with a mocking tweet.

"If US has any power, they better manage their country, tackle #WhiteSupremacy rather than meddle in nations' affairs. #Charlottesville," Khamenei's official Twitter feed posted.

Khamenei's office was responding to the furore in the US over an attack in Charlottesville by a suspected Nazi sympathiser, who ploughed his car into anti-racism protesters, leaving one dead and 19 injured.

US President Donald Trump has raised another huge controversy by saying there was "blame on both sides".

"It is clear that religious and racial discrimination, Islamophobia, and xenophobia are a widespread and frequent phenomenon among American politicians," spokesman Bahram Ghasemi hit back on the ministry's website.

Washington Post:

> > > Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini yesterday ordered the release and immediate deportation of women and blacks among the 70 hostages held at the American Embassy here since its siezure two weeks ago by Iranian militants.
> > > The state radio said the militants holding the embassy had accepted Khomeini's directive to free the estimated 10 women and blacks.
> > > Khomeini justified his clemency on grounds that "Islam reserves special rights for women" and that "blacks for a long time have lived under oppression and pressure in America and may have been sent [to Iran under duress.]"
> > Archive

The headline after reading such nonsense should be "Islam may have a history of Jew-hatred, but they are certainly a tool for Zionist power today". Every conspiracy theory about desert people and Talmudic whitey haters is coming true. Perhaps using countries, founded by Europeans for their posterity, as a Zionist exercise to prop up your ethnostate is exactly what needs a good circumcision…or truth bombing. Snip snip.

Tucker Carlson, one of the few on cable TV known for going after both sides in Washington, was praised by the likes of Newsweek and CNN for his coverage of the assassination, but was criticized by others for going:

> ….after Sasse and Iran hawk John Bolton to avoid attacking Trump directly.
> Archive

Speaking of Newsweek, they correctly quoted Tucker and reported that Tucker pointed out that if Iran had killed one of OUR generals, no American would hesitate to consider it an act of war. You can recall that Trump decided against attacking Iran, reportedly after listening Tucker on Fox. Here's Newsweek:

> Speaking on Fox News, Carlson described how "it's no exaggeration" to suggest that by the time his show is next on the air the U.S. will be involved with a conflict with Iran while criticizing those who appear to be wishing this was the case.
> "From Iran's perspective, we're already there. If Iranian forces killed the chairman of our joint chiefs of staff, for example, would you consider it an act of war?" Carlson added.
> Bolton himself tweeted how he hopes this will result in "the first step to regime change in Tehran."
> "Soleimani was plotting imminent and sinister attacks on American diplomats and military personnel but we caught him in the act and terminated him. We took action last night to stop a war. We did not take action to start a war," Trump told reporters on Friday.
> Archive

Tucker breaks from colleagues, goes sane! Yeah, but as Trump said about shooting some on Fifth Avenue, the republican base isn't abandoning the dEAR lEADER any time soon. Chuck Molinari, a businessman in Pennsylvania, had this to say:

> The president's domestic opponents and global allies warned that the death of Gen. Qassem Soleimani in a drone strike created a more dangerous world, inviting Iranian retaliation and risking a Middle Eastern conflagration. Within 24 hours, the Pentagon ordered another 3,000 U.S. troops to the region.
> Chuck Molinari, a businessman in the crucial Pennsylvania swing county of Luzerne, said Soleimani might not have been as well known as Osama bin Laden, but the strike was justified and unlikely to drag the U.S. deeper into war. "I don't think that Trump is going to lose his support no matter what he does," he said.
> Archive

And that's precisely it, the fact that the right-wing propaganda is this country has churned out the phrase "Trump Deranged Syndrome" to deflect any criticism of Trump by the left as "not accepting the results of the election" is quite rich. Consider that the right never penetrates their OWN echochamber to listen to other view points. You could be a republican and never know that the Iran nuclear deal Obama set up, which Trump raged against time after time, was specifically to encourage diplomacy. And the lesson from the toppling of Muammar Gaddafi in Libya is that you better have nuclear weapons as a deterrent, or the Americans will come, sodomize you and laugh.

Iran promised retaliation: (archive)

> - Iran's supreme leader is vowing 'a forceful revenge.'
> - Americans are evacuating, and oil prices are rising.
> - General Suleimani led 20 years of spying and proxy warfare.
> - The general's deputy succeeded him within hours.

I hate to bring up a sordid subject, but remember Jacob Wohl: Blumpf surrogate, felon, uber-Zionist, faker of death threats, Instagram model and smearer of Mueller and Buttigieg as sexual criminals? Quite the track record, but will that get him into the military to fight for Israel?

> Wohl's hypothetical future platoon-mates might want to be aware that Wohl has a reputation for failing spectacularly. Last year, he teamed up with lobbyist Jack Burkman to smear Special Counsel Robert Mueller with a sexual assault allegation that completely collapsed when the alleged victim failed to show, then accused Wohl of making it all up. In April, The Daily Beast caught Wohl and Burkman trying to manufacture a similar allegation against Democratic presidential hopeful Pete Buttigieg.
> Any military recruiters, meanwhile, might be interested in Wohl's history of faking death threats against himself, then reporting the bogus threats to law enforcement. In March, Wohl was caught faking threats with a dummy Twitter account during a trip to Minneapolis.
> Archive

Feel free to throw up in your mouth at the hubris. I didn't. And not because this isn't revolting as hell. It's because I've come to dismiss these people as having small penis syndrome: taking an almost sexual pleasure at the idea of brown people being killed. It wouldn't be so bad if they had no power, but they do.

Now you may think war is eminent, but what about cyberattacks? Well:

> Iran's cyber troops long have been among the world's most capable and aggressive — disrupting banking, hacking oil companies, even trying to take control of a dam from afar — while typically stopping short of the most crippling possible actions, say experts on the country's capabilities.

> Israel hacks Iran and makes it look like Americans did it, then Israel hacks America and makes it look like Iran did it. Obviously trying to instigate a war. Archive

So I guess this what they mean by winning, right? I am tired of winning.

Speaking of Israel, Iran and Israel once had proper relations:

> Iran and Israel maintained warm relations for almost four decades before the 1979 Islamic Revolution that overthrew the shah and imposed a theocratic Shiiite Muslim regime that for four decades now has called for “death to Israel” and is accused of backing and masterminding numerous terrorist attacks against Israeli or Jewish targets, including the 1992 and 1994 attacks on the Israeli Embassy and the Jewish community center in Buenos Aires that left over 100 people dead.

It seems as though Israel is like Michigan if lakes were Muslims.

> Just across the border from the ski lifts, Israel confronts the Islamic Revolutionary Guard Corps forces that were commanded by Suleimani. On the adjacent border, with Lebanon, Israel faces Hezbollah, an Iranian proxy army. The Gaza Strip, along Israel’s southern border, is ruled by Hamas, an Islamist militia supported by Iran.
> The Israeli army officer described the situation as “definitely higher readiness than usual, but not DEFCON One. We want to err on the side of caution, but we know we are not the first target. We are the second.”

Hamas sends their condolences.

> Lauding Suleimani’s support for “the Palestinian resistance,” Hamas issued a statement expressing its “sincere condolences and sympathy to the Iranian leadership and the Iranian people for the martyrdom” of Suleimani.

Of course the Israelis are happy, ergo, that Soleimani is dead.

> Opposition leader Benny Gantz, a former army chief who is running against Netanyahu in elections set to take place two months from now, applauded the killing as an “appropriate response to anyone responsible for the murder of countless innocent people and for undermining global stability.”
> Archive

Even Jewish publications like Haaretz are admitting that Israel benefits from this whole killing of Soleimani. And opinion piece by Aluf Benn sets up the dilemma that Trump is under by appealing to recent history.

> It is not hard to imagine the political outcome of another hostage crisis in Tehran, after the takeover of the U.S. Embassy by Iranian students in 1979: a catastrophe for Trump’s reelection, the way President Jimmy Carter retired after one term following his failure to secure the release of the captive diplomats. And if that’s too far back in history for Trump and his aides, they certainly remember the mortal blow against their nemesis Hillary Clinton after the fatal assault on the U.S. Embassy in Benghazi in 2012.

The reason Soleimani was successfully taken out, was because he believed his own press and essentially had an ego the size of Orange Man > Soleimani apparently believed his own PR, the admirers who shared his photos and the enemies who glorified him. There's no doubt that he was a courageous commander and that his frequent and well-publicized visits to the front lines strengthened his position among his accomplices and those under his command. His open movements in the Baghdad airport with his militia commanders showed an overabundance of confidence and disregard for basic security rules.

However, that is not the end of the story. He poked the hornet's nest, namely, pissed off the U.S. by failing to do their bidding, and paid the price.

> But his greater error was strategic, not tactical. With all due respect to his daring, he headed a relatively small force, which over the last decade enjoyed freedom of movement as long as it served the interests of the United States, or at least did not compromise them. He cooperated with the United States in crushing the common enemy, the Islamic State, and the Americans reconciled themselves to his rescue of President Bashar Assad's regime in Syria. But the moment that he worked directly against them, the "subcontractor" was taken out, like Israel did with senior Hamas and Islamic Jihad figures in the Gaza Strip.

The author appeals to an almost paelo-con notion of legalism, as though international law ever deterred Bush's genocidal tendencies on behalf of the Saudis > Soleimani was killed in Iraq and not in Iran, which is still out of bounds in terms of an American attack – also in the absence of congressional or United Nations approval. If Iran goes crazy and attacks the United States, it will find that this has never ended well. As the scholar Edward Luttwak wrote about Pearl Harbor, Japan would have been better off if its pilots had dropped their bombs in the ocean rather than expose their country to devastation.

Naivete aside, the author then gives the real clincher: this is all a re-election strategy on the part of Netanyahu, currently under indictment for a scandal-ridden administration:

> The security situation will help Netanyahu bring to the polls right-wing voters who had previously had enough of him because of the corruption affairs, but will leave that aside to save the country from Iran. On the other hand, talk of war and emergencies distances the participation of the largely Arab Joint List from participation in a future coalition with Kahol Lavan and discourages Arab voters, who went to the polls in September in the hope of such participation. Netanyahu's survival, therefore, depends on his success in keeping the security agenda in the headlines in the coming eight weeks.
> Archive

So basically the American Empire must swoop in and save his sorry ass. Globalhomo incentives to decriminalize butt-sex aside, this does some like a huge case of white people smelling ZOG farts.

Pompeo said “the risk of terror increases through appeasement”. But he doesn’t really thing that. It’s just an excuse. And aren’t terrorists the ones baiting US in war because they want to have a rightfully felt claim to killing the infidel?

Now for some fun takes!

Kyle Kulinski, founder of Secular Talk and a progressive commentator tweeted

> If you think Iran is the aggressor I have a bridge to sell you. The US overthrew their democratically elected leader Mohammad Mosaddegh in ’53 bc he nationalized Iranian oil instead of giving it to US & UK. Ever since ’79 revolution we’ve wanted to make them a puppet state again. Archive

> I've never seen progressives admit Tucker Carlson was right about anything until last night. Opposition to regime change wars seems to be the only common ground some might have with us, since we both want to focus on our domestic agendas, which differ more radically than anything. Archive

Regardless of who Soleimani was, he never banned me from YouTube or Twitter, he never invaded America and used it for his own interests (as the Jews do), and he never stuck a gun in my face and forcibly integrated my schools, or fired me for saying nigger, or put me jail for defending myself against feral apes (read urban youths).

Soleimani was not my enemy, my enemy is the American order of fake-Christian Zionist interventionism. Sure one could invoke the 20s-40s as a time when America could reasonably be considered Finland or Switzerland. But people like Nick Fuentes or Tucker Carlson whose common refrain is to whine about wasting money and “why can’t we use it for American interests at home” are severely missing the point. You are defending a country that doesn’t exist. America is not a country, it’s government is illegitimate (as it tacitly endorses drag queen story hour in publicly funded libraries). John Bolton and Ben Shapiro, as gross cretinous creatures as they are, have more of a claim to “America First” than Paleo-cons do. You cannot invoke the past as a justification for policies which are not in the historical vector of America. America was never isolationist or interested in it’s people. It was an experiment of individualist secular liberalism that has failed. The only way to fix this problem is to have a holistic view of the geopolitical landscape, think big. Imagine an order which is post-American and fundamentally antithetical the evil that America flaunts around the world.

You will never be able to return to a point in history or call upon a begone era to conserve some utopian vision of American “when we were a people”. America was never a people, it was an economic zone for the highest bidder. Recognizing that those rags known as the Constitution and Declaration of Independence must be set aside in favor of a new order: one which is a homeland explicitly for those of white European descent, which sees economics as serving people, and not the inverse, a government founded on the splendor of European heritage and a culture imbued with the royalty of Jesus Christ as King of Society, according to the Restoration of Holy Mother the Catholic Church.

Only when this holistic view takes places, rejecting the current America and it's sordid history can white people begin to rebuild.
